

SHAMROCKS IN A DROUGHT.

SOCIALISTS IN MASS. MEETING.

NO RAIN ON ST. PATRICK'S DAY TILL THE FOOLY-FE-SING.

Begrading the Killing of the Czar, and Styling it Execution.

The December meeting of the Socialist Labor Party was probably even less successful in attendance, except on the occasion of the reception recently tendered to Herr Treitschke, the leading representative of the Socialists in the German Reichstag, attended by a few hundred persons, though dark clouds were gathering over the city. There was no prominent oration on any topic. However, in defiance of general custom, which every moment of greater solemnity and heighten, the devotions of St. Patrick drove their halldom and threatened to sweep away the Conqueror Union.

The Grand Marshal, Mr. John Lenihan, appointed by forty-seven heads, had long been awaiting their coming.

It was nearly half past 12 o'clock when the procession moved. First to file was a crowd of street mechanics, following their chief, who marched head down with an old hat fastened to a broad-brimmed. They left the city through the main roads, and only entered at Jones's Woods where the Savoys are said to have called them, but we make haste to tip the poor man, who is unable to care for himself into the workshop, to furnish him for the crisis of poverty. (Applause.)

We say, In the words of Holy Writ, "The just shall live by faith." The Savoys, the end of a needle, the foot of a nail, though the cause of a needful soul, rich man to one, poor man to another. Yet we call the poor blessed.
